I will ask the question again. How could the engineer that the city hired to come in and do the inspection pass him now when last fall the very same inspector FAILED him for "no work performed"? As we all know, there has been no additional work since then with the exception of the downspouts.

I would be more than happy to pay for another civil engineer to come in and review Mr. Bono's most current findings as they relate to what he found last fall.

To Whom It May Concern,

The homeowner at the above address received their Temporary Occupancy.

Interior issues remain to be completed. Since the City does not employ a state licensed civil engineer to review or inspect residential construction. Due to the sensitivity of this matter, the City had hired a state licensed civil engineer to perform the final inspection, which was approved. The Building Division has no alternative but to rely on his professional opinion in this matter.

Respectfully,

Steven L. Cutaia, M.C.P.
